SCHOOL REPORT.

To the Citizens of Auburn:—

Although there is nothing that may seem very remarkable to report in regard to the schools, yet there are some things to which it seems desirable to call attention; and, also, some suggestions in regard to what needs to be done hereafter. When we consider what a benefit our public schools have been in the past, and may be in the future, it seems but reasonable that we do what we can to sustain and improve them. The school work has been done quietly and well in most cases; the teachers have, nearly all, been well qualified; the parents have, in most cases, sustained and encouraged the teachers; and the scholars have, generally, done well; still, there is great need of improvement in our schools, for the work has not all been done in the best manner, while, in some cases, the time was so limited that what was desirable could not be accomplished, and, even if our schools were in perfect condition now, they would not continue to be so during another year, unless all concerned perform their work perfectly. The parents can do a great deal for the improvement of our schools by requiring the scholars to be prompt and constant in their attendance. An inspection of the registers shows great need of improvement in this respect, for very few are perfect in attendance, and, in some cases, the absences are very frequent. Sometimes absences are unavoidable, but frequently some trivial circumstance keeps the scholar at home.

It may seem to be a matter of small consequence if a scholar is absent occasionally; but a great many in our schools lose one or two weeks in this way, the school costs the same as it would if all were present, and the teacher is put to inconvenience when the absentees return. These same principles apply to cases of tardiness and dismissal. When we have so little school it seems desirable to make the most of it. Another way in which parents may benefit our schools, is by requiring scholars to yield prompt and cheerful obedience to all reasonable requirements of the teacher. If any one feels injured, it is better to speak to the teacher; very likely a good understanding of the teacher's motive may prove it to be right, but if the teacher still insists upon doing what seems wrong, it should be referred to the committee; the law requires him to decide such matters.

No doubt all will admit that the selection and employment of teachers is an important matter, often attended with inconvenience, and sometimes not giving satisfactory results. Now, it seems as if it would be much better, when we have a good teacher in a school, to keep her as long as she does well, which is as long as one ought to stay anywhere. So long as the present system is in force, it seems desirable to elect the best prudential committee possible in each district, with the understanding that the same teacher is desired, unless a better can be obtained. It seems as if our schools might be benefited by having a town school-committee, composed of those best qualified for the work, whose duty it shall be to employ suitable teachers and visit the schools, their term of office to continue for a series of years, thereby securing greater stability in our school system; but whatever system, or want of system, we may have, nothing but good, honest, earnest work can make our schools what they ought to be, and this any teacher ought to be willing to perform. Every one who employs a teacher should be sure that she is mentally and morally qualified for the work, able to govern the school, and to interest the scholars in their studies; but however much a teacher may try to do for the good of the scholar, she labors under great disadvantages, and cannot secure the best results, unless the home influences are what they should be. This being so, it seems unreasonable to complain of the teacher's shortcomings unless the parent is willing to do what he can for his own children, for how can he expect one who teaches them one or two terms to take a deeper interest in their welfare than he does himself? Every good teacher will feel under obligations to do what she can for the improvement of the scholars, and not teach merely for the sake of the money, but the teacher's work cannot take the place of that which should be done at home.

The branches that are required by law are reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, grammar, geography, and history. Though a comprehensive education is desirable, yet the time in school is so limited that it does not, in most cases, seem desirable to go beyond these. The following are the text-books recommended to those purchasing, unless otherwise directed by my successor:—

Reading-books,—Monroe's series. Spellers,—Worcester's Pronouncing, Cambridge Edition. Writing-books,—Payson, Dunton, & Scribner's. Arithmetics,—Robinson's Shorter Course. Geographies,—Warren's Common School and Primary. Illustrated Lessons in our Language, by Quackenbos.

In regard to illustrative apparatus it seems desirable that something more be done. All the schools but one have dictionaries, which can be used to great profit. One school has a globe, and two have good sets of outline maps. It does not seem as though it need to require any very great exertion to procure so much for each school, and more would be desirable.

During the year, the school-house in District No. 1 has been repaired and furnished with new seats, which add a great deal to the comfort of the scholars as well as to the attractiveness of the school-room. Some other districts might well profit by this example.

It seems desirable that something be done in regard to the school money, either that more be raised, or some means be used to make what we have go further. In some districts this is accomplished by the old-fashioned method of boarding the teacher and giving the wood. This old fashion proves good in those districts where each is willing to do his part, and gives several weeks more of school, but in some of our school-districts the people seem unwilling to do either. Our school money has been less than usual during the past year, and seems likely to be still less the coming year, as the dog tax cannot be used, and something will be taken from the school money according to law to pay for the new state map for the use of the schools. In one district there have been only nine weeks of school during the year, and about enough money left for three weeks more. There is a large school in the district, and this certainly gives but little opportunity for a good education. Now, cannot more school money be raised?

It is not desirable to make personal remarks, either in regard to those who have done good work, or those who have failed to accomplish all that we could desire. No doubt the purpose was in every case better than the results achieved. Perhaps as much has been accomplished as we could expect, though not all that we could desire.

All of which is respectfully submitted to your consideration.

FRANK B. COULT,
Superintending School Committee.
