History of Madbury.

ORIGIN OF THE NAME MADBURY.

The name Madbury antedates the parish and the town by more than a century. It was made a separate parish, with town privileges by the Provincial Assembly, May 31, 1755, and was incorporated a township May 26, 1768. An attempt was made in 1743 to secure parish privileges, but the town of Dover and the Provincial Assembly both refused to grant the petition that year, and the petitioners did not obtain this wish until 1755, when the territory was made a parish for ministerial purposes. The town is in the shape of a wedge, in between Dover on the east, Durham and Lee on the west, Barrington on the north; on the south it comes to a point with the lines of Dover and Durham, at a ledge called Cedar Point, where one can put his feet in three towns and stand, facing south, and look down the Pascataqua river to the Hilton Point bridge. The distance along the Barrington line is a little less than three miles. The line between Dover and Madbury is seven miles long; the westerly line is about the same. The name Madbury was first applied to the territory west of the Barbado pond, in the vicinity of the ancient Gerrish mill, on the Bellamy river. Just when it began to be used there is no record, but March 19, 1693-4, it appears on Dover records when forty acres of land were granted to Francis Pitman "on the N. W. side of Logg hill, on the N. E. side if the path going to 'Madbury', where he had all Reddy begun to improve."

The "Logg hill" referred to is at the Gerrish sawmill, down which the lumbermen rolled the logs into the pond, ready to be used in sawing. At that date the name Madbury had become well established in use among the lumbermen, so they knew where to locate Pitman's grant. Probably the name had then been in use among the lumbermen thirty or forty years. The "path to Madbury" referred to above is the present road over the Bellamy river at the mill site. The reader will observe that the record does not say that Pitman's grant is "in" Madbury but on the side of the path "going to Madbury;" so the fair inference is that the locality (a lumber lot) called Madbury, was somewhere between Gerrish's sawmill and "New Town" in Lee. There is no other town in the United States of the same shape or the same name as Madbury; in the old records it is sometimes spelled Medberry, or Medbury, but generally Madbury. A funny name; whence its origin?
