REPORT

OF

THE SCHOOL BOARD,

OF THE

TOWN OF PELHAM,

FOR THE

YEAR ENDING MARCH 1, 1889.

SCHOOL BOARD.

- CHARLES W. HOBBS, . . . Term expires March, 1889.
GEORGE H. CURRIER, . . . Term expires March, 1890.
AUGUSTUS BERRY, . . . Term expires March, 1891.

REPORT.

THERE are some things that will give the past year a historical distinction in the educational interests of this town.

SCHOOL HOUSES.

The old-time school house, with its pine forms and desks, so shamefully marred, has taken its final departure from the town. And while these old school houses have a history and memories very precious to those who have been pupils in them, still they had staid too long for the welfare of this generation, and the new ones are welcomed most gladly. Some commemoration of the old houses and dedication of the new ones, would have been interesting, profitable and appropriate. But the occupation of two new school houses, spacious buildings, pleasant, and furnished with modern school chairs and desks, must constitute an epoch in the educational interests of the town. Besides, a third house has been repaired and remodelled, furnished tastefully and substantially, and out-buildings erected, such as should be attached to every school house. The other two school houses were modernized some years since, but are in need of repairs. The one in No. 2 should receive attention immediately. It is true economy to keep school buildings in thorough repair. The furniture should be varnished often. Any defacement or injury to the buildings should receive immediate attention. Well kept school buildings are lessons in carefulness and thrift to the young. A neat and pleasant school room is the best kind of an educator, a moral power in the lives of children. It shames bad thoughts and checks rudeness and disorder. It is an inspiration to things that are pure, manly, womanly and noble. The atmosphere of such a room is a tonic to all the best impulses of children's natures.

FREE TEXT-BOOKS.

Another thing that will mark an era in the history of the schools is "The Commencement in Free Text-Books and School Supplies," in other words, free implements for school work. There is a necessity for a uniform and adequate supply of these. It is well understood that no work can be successfully conducted unless all employed have proper implements, and in nothing is this necessity more manifest than in school work. Each pupil must have the text-books of his studies. Two cannot advantageously use the same book. Borrowing and lending is attended with confusion and loss of time.

THE MEANING OF FREE TEXT-BOOKS.

The fundamental idea is helping to the largest efficiency in school work. It is not to GIVE the children books. It is not to provide books for those who have books; such are expected to use their own books until they need others; but to help those who have not, and make sure that there shall be no loss of time or inefficiency in the work of school from a want of books. There are families that will prefer to own their children's books. The idea is that the town buy the text-books and sell at cost to those who wish to own them, and loan to others, subject to certain rules and regulations, such as—the books must not be taken from the school room without permission; they must be used with care; there must be no marking or writing upon them, either with pencil or ink; and if lost or injured in any way, they must be paid for.

THE ADVANTAGES OF FREE TEXT BOOKS.

One is, that all who wish to buy, can purchase some 30 per cent. less. Publishers will sell to a town at 16 2-3 per cent. discount; to a trader at only 10 per cent. discount. The School Board thought it wise to change readers, and contracted, in conformity with the laws of New Hampshire, to use the series of readers five years. The publishing firm specified in the contract that they would furnish the books permanently to the town at a discount of 16 2-3 per cent., and to a trader at 10 per cent. But no dealer can afford to handle the books, subject to the losses—that are inevitable from trusting, and the interest upon the stock that he must carry—short of a profit of some 20 or 25 per cent., which must increase the price to the buyer to some 30 per cent. above what the town could furnish them for.

But while this might seem to be the chief advantage of free text-books, there are others of more importance and greater economy. There is rarely a term of school, when the work is not delayed days because more or less of the children have not the necessary books. Somehow there is a reluctance about buying school books that is very peculiar. It is delayed and delayed, postponed and postponed. But if the town furnishes the books, this evil is corrected. Then there are those who find it very difficult to meet the expense of text-books for a family. They can be relieved of this heavy burden without the humiliation of a public charge, or depending on borrowing, an uncomfortable way to all parties and a source of much trouble. A book can be placed in the hands of every child who goes to school without one, by the town. He can attend at once to the business of the school, classes can be formed without delay. Parents who promptly provide their children with books, must inevitably suffer loss by those who do not, which free text-books will prevent.

The matter of "Free Text-Books," is of the nature of a Public Library. This will have patrons from the owners of private libraries. There are books that one wishes to read but once, he will go to the Public Library for these. So while there are certain text-books that it is very desirable that the pupil own and keep, it often happens that he needs a book for only a term or part of a term or some younger member of the family needs a book for a little while, till an older member has completed it, thus the single book will be sufficient for the household. In such instances there will not only be the saving of the expense of the books, but the trouble of having needless books around.

There is also an advantage in facilitating the classification of the school. The value of a school,—other things being equal,—will depend on the classification. The reluctance with which scholars go into a class that would lessen the number of classes, often comes from the consideration that they will have to get a book. There are no lines in which we may consider the matter of free text-book, in which we do not find economy.

THE APPROPRIATION OF THE LAST YEAR.

Though this was inadequate to a supply of the schools, it has nevertheless done an important service and it is hoped—has prepared the way for the town to make an appropriation adequate to the wants of the schools. The change in geographies was a necessity. Something inevitable. The book in use had been in the schools some twenty years. The publishers had revised it, so that for the purposes of classification, it was a new book. The Board deemed it best to take another author, less expensive, and, as it seemed to them, better suited to the wants of the schools. In making this change the appropriation was needed. Some bought geographies outright, and to such as wished the town has loaned. The Board desired that more attention should be paid to penmanship and furnished free writing books, and the result has been better penmanship.

The Board would have gladly loaned books in other branches, but the appropriation was not sufficient to do this in all the schools, and it was not deemed just or wise to do in one school that which they could not do in all.

But from their private funds they have bought books and sold them to scholars at cost, which on some books has been a saving to the pupil of near 40 per cent.

Free text-books are on the stream of progress. They will come. It is inevitable. The schools are not really free without them. The school cannot be truly free until it is furnished with text-books. The State may provide a house and a teacher; the children may occupy the free seats, and receive the free instruction of the teachers, but they cannot be scholars doing school work until they are provided with books. But while the State has not made the schools absolutely free, it has granted to the towns the power to do it. The last legislature came very near an enactment that would have obliged the towns to do it. The next legislature probably will do it. A people may exercise a commendable pride in a public sentiment in advance of any legislation, and in a progressive spirit that leads the legislation of the State.

THE END OF SCHOOL AND HOW ATTAINED.

The process of all education is not a taking in but a drawing out. The object of school is not primarily to acquire knowledge, but to learn how to acquire, to learn to think. When a scholar has learned to think, then he has attained the end of education. The teacher often fails to recognize this fundamental principle. Parents have not understood it. The only successful teaching is that which secures thinking. There are other things which are conditions to this, such as orderly habits, proper deportment, and right sentiments.

CLASSIFICATION.

This is of prime importance. The teaching may be the best, but school work cannot be well done without this. There are certain branches that should be pursued in the schools without regard to individual preferences; and these branches should constitute sort of a course of study that pupils of similar attainments should pursue together.

THE OBJECT OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOL.

This is to prepare for true citizenship. Hence the importance of attention to the culture of the virtues of life, a respectful demeanor, and personal self-respect. The tones of voice in the school room should be carefully considered. The responsibility of life should be taught. The value of time, the importance of integrity, thrift, carefulness, economy—things on which the success and happiness of life depend.

SOME THINGS OF INTEREST.

In No. 4, Mr. Alton Wilson gave weekly lessons in music through the year. His services were generously recognized by the friends of the school at the close of the year. The children also presented their teacher with some appropriate and choice tokens of their gratitude and esteem.

No. 5, by some entertainments given by the school, has raised funds for the purchase of an organ for the school room. It is to be hoped that in the not distant future, each school room of the town will be furnished with a musical instrument.

CONCLUSION.

In three of the schools the same teachers have labored through the year, with very satisfactory results. The Board has sought and labored for the highest efficiency of the schools, and any failure in the realization of this has been a mortification, and the cause of poignant regret.

ROLL OF HONOR.
