REPORT

OF THE

SUPERINTENDING SCHOOL COMMITTEE

OF PEMBROKE.

THE position which the laws of the State assign the Superintending School Committee, gives them opportunities of observing and judging respecting the real condition and wants of the several schools in town, not enjoyed by others; therefore, we believe it is their duty to speak kindly, but freely and plainly, of those influences and practices which are made to bear upon them.

The Town is expending yearly from its treasury about twelve hundred dollars in support of its schools; and if we add to this the value of time and board, and the expense of clothing, and the furnishing our children with books; we shall sum up an amount greater and of more intense public interest than any other which concerns the community at large.

And we believe that much good might result from a serious consideration of this subject on the part of parents and those having the care of our youth. It is an interesting feature of our school system, which requires the whole property of the town to be taxed for the support of public education, and it demands the grateful notice of those who are poor. The means of a substantial education are thus placed within the reach of all.

The amount expended on each scholar attending school last year was three dollars and thirty-nine cents. In this way a large number of families are having a larger amount of money expended for their benefit, than they are contributing, by taxes or otherwise, for the support of public institutions.

The district school is an institution of too great importance to be made the sport of party strife or personal favoritism; it should be kept separate from party feuds and all personal and neighborhood quarrels, but it is not always so.

School districts are sometimes made the arena on which are enacted scenes of the most selfish and unpatriotic character; this ought not to be.

The election and duties of Prudential School Committees is a subject often referred to in school reports, and by some may be considered as exhausted and not to be referred to again; but we shall venture a suggestion or two on this point, with all due respect to the office and responsible station of said committee; for we consider it an office of very great responsibility.

The employment or non-employment of a teacher for a subsequent term, furnishes a question of a grave character for the district committee to consider; the best good of the school should govern his decision.

When a good teacher has taught one or more terms in the same district with good success, we think it very desirable that such a teacher should be continued; the highest good of the school demands it. But one term of an inefficient teacher is enough.

How to determine such a question may often be perplexing. Sometimes there may be a strong appeal to relationship or personal partiality; or one's own children, or some friend's children may interpose reasons for or against; and although these reasons may all be trivial and unworthy, still it may require a high-minded and patriotic man to resist them; but unless a man will merge selfish interests in the general good, he ought not to hold such an office.

The position we take is this: the Superintending School Committee, having examined both teacher and school, are better qualified to judge of the fitness of a teacher for a particular school, than others, who have not had the same means of information; and we respectfully suggest whether it would not be proper for district committees to make inquiries respecting such candidates, before employing them. Former Superintending Committees might render valuable aid in this cause.

It is sometimes easier to avoid an evil than to cure it.

A suitable attention to such things as we have named would occasionally be a saving not only of money to a district, but of character to the teacher.

No teacher, with a proper appreciation of character, can desire to occupy a station with inability to fill it with honor; and certainly no school committee should knowingly thrust a teacher into such a place.

A good teacher, for want of adaptation, may fail in one district, but succeed in another. We know that this principle obtains in other departments of business, and why not in school keeping?

The business of selecting school teachers is one of too much importance to be under the control of captious influences.

Our schools sometimes suffer from frequent gatherings of the scholars, at evening parties of pleasure and sport, and also some other gatherings, dignified by the name of speaking or spelling schools, and the like, may be allowed to divert the attention too much from the ordinary exercises of the school.

It should be borne in mind that a few weeks comprise the entire length of our schools; (very different from city and large village schools, which continue through the year.) How important then that nothing improper be allowed to interpose obstacles to their highest usefulness.

We believe that our schools suffer to a greater or less extent every year from some extraneous influences, which might and ought to be dispensed with; such has been the case the past winter.

It can not be profitable to employ a teacher to instruct our children, and at the same time allow them to engage in pursuits adapted to dissipate those instructions, and prevent the forming of habits of patient, serious thought.

Writing composition, and declamation, when properly conducted, may be made useful and interesting, by giving a necessary and pleasing variety to the exercises of the school-room, and developing the genius and power of the scholar; but those should be made entirely subservient to the improvement of the mind; and if this can not be attained, we believe such exercises had better be omitted. We should not attempt to pursue too many branches of science in from eight to twelve weeks.

To do a little and do it well, is much better than to attempt more and only half do it.

DISTRICT No. 1.

Summer Term by Miss DAVIS. The scholars generally manifested a spirit of obedience and attention to their studies. From the answers promptly given to the questions proposed, though their voices were for the most part too low and indistinct, it was apparent that good improvement had been made in the various branches which had been pursued. In most cases where failures occurred, the cause was attributable to tardiness or absence on the part of the scholars. The teacher has evidently managed the school with attention to its best progress, and with very good success, and justly merits commendation. Winter Term taught by Mr. HARVEY.

Much pains taken to improve the school in reading, which is very important, and too much neglected; to accomplish this end the teacher read paragraphs for the imitation of his pupils, endeavoring to guide them to a proper accent and emphasis, tone of voice, &c.; encouraging progress was made, though perfection was not attained; the teacher has labored to instil into the mind, first principles and the reason of things. This school has good advantages, and ought to be among the very first in point of progress.

School for the most part quiet and orderly. The teacher had evidently secured the good will of his scholars, and maintained discipline, through kindness, rather than by arbitrary power.

DISTRICT No. 2.

Miss OTTERSON, teacher of Summer School. The teacher was deeply engaged in efforts to instruct her pupils, and enable them thoroughly to comprehend their various studies; her labors were crowned with encouraging success. At the close of the term the conduct of the school was such as to indicate that good discipline had been maintained. The teacher obviously enjoyed the respect and affection of her charge, and ruled them by persuasion and love, rather than by coercive measures. The reading with some exceptions was good, while a few excelled. Winter Term by Miss RICHARDSON.

Quietness and order predominated in the school; the recitations, with some exceptions, gave evidence of study on the part of the scholars, and well directed efforts on the part of the teacher. She was active and prompt in conducting the various exercises, appeared to understand her work well, and ready to give instruction in the various studies brought under review.

Such promptness and decision promise well for the future. This school maintains its standing in the first rank; recitations in the more advanced classes, in summer and winter, would compare favorably with any in town. Rhetorical exercises at the close of each term, which were well performed; compositions well composed; some of them excellent both in style and thought.

DISTRICT No. 3.

Miss COCHRAN, teacher both terms. School not in a very advanced state. The labors of the teacher have been abundant, and seem to have been quite successful.

School has been orderly, school-room kept clean, showing that neatness was considered appropriate, and essential as a means of mental improvement. The closing exercises were well sustained, exhibiting good improvement. The standing of this school has improved very much during the year; the design of the teacher seems to have been to inculcate first principles and form correct habits.

DISTRICT No. 4.

Summer School taught by Miss MOORE. School very still when visited; an air of cheerful quietness prevailed in the school-room.

The teacher appears to have been quite successful in this, her first school; and what is new in this district, secured the good will of the whole district.

Winter Term by Mr. MILES; although too short to accomplish very much, was yet attended with good results. The teacher appeared at home and has labored faithfully; and had there been closer application, and more patient thought on the part of scholars, there would have been greater progress. This appeared in the grammar class, and some others. Scholars were respectful, and orderly, with very few exceptions.

DISTRICT No. 5.

Miss PUTNEY, teacher both terms. The former character of the teacher, as faithful and devoted to the best interests of her pupils, has been fully sustained, it is believed.

Through the willingness of the teacher thus to do, and the willingness of the district to give her board, nearly twice the length of school has been enjoyed; and while no one probably feels the poorer or in any way harmed by the arrangement, much good has been done; much good instruction has been imparted, many lessons learned; and all attained at less expense than in any other way. The general deportment of the large scholars has been an improvement on last year.

DISTRICT No. 6.

Miss RICHARDSON, teacher in summer. School appeared well, no whispering, scholars respectful and interested; well advanced in Arithmetic and Grammar; have given attention to thoroughness; the improvement in reading and in studies generally has been good.

Winter Term, by Miss CHESLEY. Expectations, based upon former reported success, have not been fully realized.

There appeared not to have been that close application, and devoted interest, which has been manifest at some former times in this school. It is possible that other than the ordinary exercises of the school may have claimed too large a share of attention.

It is believed a retrograde movement has been made among the larger scholars by returning to an old reading book; and thus reviving old habits of carelessness, which were in process of being corrected. Reading has not improved as much as could be desired.

The general deportment of the school, when visited, was good.

DISTRICT No. 7.

Summer School, by Miss A. FOWLER. The school made respectable progress; particular scholars had done very well for so short a time.

There was too much whispering. This is a great hindrance to successful study.

The Winter Term, by Miss E. M. FOWLER, commenced with the prospect of a more orderly school than is generally enjoyed in this district in the winter; and, judging from appearances at the close, this had been the case, with few exceptions. It is with sorrow that truth requires it to be said, that a few of the oldest girls, young ladies! manifested but little respect for their teacher, or the proper decorum of the school-room. Yet the progress of most of the scholars has been commendable.

But, comparing the present condition of this school with what it was two years ago, there has been marked advance; but this advance is greatly retarded by a pertinacious retention of old books. It is very difficult to convince some people that there is a better way than that in which they have trodden in times past.

DISTRICT No. 8 — 1ST DIVISION.

Both Terms under the care of Miss WILLEY. Many of the scholars in this school seem hardly to know what restraint is, or how to submit to it; the teacher therefore finds it a difficult task to manage them, and bring such order out of confusion as to promote their improvement. We believe she has exerted herself with the utmost diligence and earnest desire to benefit, in all respects, those under her care. She did not, however, succeed in maintaining so good order, in summer, as desirable, but there was improvement in this respect toward its close. The Committee encouraged the teacher to decision, firmness, yet mildness in her efforts to maintain correct discipline.

During the winter there was an evident gain in the appearance of the school: more quietness, with a disposition to obey, and submit to restraint, and more attention to study, and of course much better progress than before. There was gratifying progress in the reading lessons—a principal branch taught in this school. Other studies gave evidence of not having been neglected. We believe the teacher has endeavored to accomplish all she could.

DISTRICT No. 8 — 2d DIVISION.

The Summer Term was taught by Miss GAULT. The teacher has won a good reputation in times past, and has well sustained it the past season. The scholars have been attentive to their studies, and little inclined to disobedience or improper conduct. The exercises of the school have been conducted with order, promptness and good profit as to the saving of time, and the benefit of all concerned. In this school there are some good readers, though all may improve. Each branch of study seemed to have been thoroughly attended to. At the close of the term there were rhetorical exercises, which were not without interest; compositions were read quite creditable to the authors.

Winter Term by Mr. COUCH. In reading, the instructor gave examples for the guidance of his scholars, and good improvement appeared to have been the result. This is commendable. In Arithmetic thorough instruction in fundamental principles was attempted, not without some good degree of success. In Writing there were some specimens of great improvement; more progress in this art than we usually find. The scholars conducted in an orderly manner, and with due respect to the teacher and their own character. More promptness in conducting the exercises might have saved time, and brought out the other branches of study, which would have been gratifying, and given us better means of judging of the success of the school.

DISTRICT No. 9.

Miss FOWLER, teacher both terms. But few scholars attended the summer school. Some of them seemed quite backward in their lessons, while others gave evidence of good improvement of their means of instruction. The teacher appeared to labor with earnest desire to aid the scholars in their studies. The school for the most part in summer was pretty orderly, though not without some degree of restlessness; and on the whole during so short a term, there was about all the progress that could be expected.

During the Winter Term a larger number of scholars attended. There were, however, various influentes and causes at work, before, and at the commencement, which operated very unfavorably to the best interests of the school. No doubt the teacher wished to succeed in her task, and keep a good school, but peculiar and untoward circumstances were too strong for her. At the close of the school there appeared to be but very little attempt at government. The larger scholars were guilty of very great improprieties of conduct, which of course could bring no credit to their character. And we fear that these things were more or less countenanced if not encouraged by those who ought to have deeply lamented them.

It is desirable that peace and harmony be restored to this district, and all their future schools be attended with the highest prosperity.
