Quotable

"I think right now the most important thing is that we recognize the reality of what we (are dealing) with, with Mr. Putin. We recognize that he is trying to break the North Atlantic alliance."

President-elect Trump's nominee for defense secretary, during testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee

Why I march

On Saturday, Jan. 21, I will join thousands of women marching in Washington, D.C., for the Women's March on Washington.

I have decided to march because women's rights are human rights. I march for women who rely on the ACA and Planned Parenthood for necessary health care and contraception. I march to show that we will not accept religious indoctrination, racial intolerance or discrimination based on sexual orientation.

I march for my daughter so that she may grow up in a world that pays her equally for her valuable time and talents, and so that she knows no boundaries based on her gender.

I march for my sons, so that they recognize the importance of women's contributions to the world.

I march to join voices with women while we tell the world that we are present, we have voices, and we will not give up.

While 200,000 women marched in Washington, there will be women around the country and the world also marching in almost 300 sister marches in every state of the nation as well as 55 global cities. Our local marches will be held in Portsmouth and Concord.

I hope that New Hampshire women will also join us in recognizing the worth and value of women. I hope that they will join in making a bold statement to the incoming administration that we will not be ignored. I hope they join us because there is still more work to do.

ON JAN. 15, 1885, Col. Louis Bell of the Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers was assigned to the command of his regiment and of the forces that met the Confederate in the battle of Franklin, ten miles south of Nashville, Tennessee. The regiment was ordered to the front on the 19th of January and fought in the battle on the 20th. The regiment lost 130 men killed and wounded.

The Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers was organized at conscription camps in 1863 and mustered into service on Oct. 28, 1864. It served in the Union Army during the Civil War and was mustered out on Aug. 15, 1865.

A Little Perspective

"The wisdom of using the Electoral College to choose our president is a hot topic. For the second time in 16 years (and the fifth time in our history), the "winner" of the national popular vote lost the presidential election in the Electoral College. To many, this "undemocratic" outcome seems wrong.

Thus, relatively speaking, the presidential ballots cast in these states carried significantly more weight than those cast by the majority of Americans who live in solidly "red" or "blue" states. To many, this incongruence in voter impact also seems wrong.

Whether our system for electing a president is wise or not, New Hampshire undeniably benefits from it. The New Hampshire primary often plays a significant role in the presidential nominating process.

And New Hampshire is a perennial first.
