WHAT IS RESEARCH?

Suppose that you want to make a ruby in a factory—not a more beautiful one, but a real ruby, just as beautiful as it is in nature. To make it, you must use a physical test from the natural stone. You begin by analyzing rubies chemically and physically. Then you try to make rubies just as nature did, by combining the carbon dioxide with the iron and the platinum. Your rubies are the result of research—research of a different kind from that required to improve the stone.

Suppose, as you melted up your chemicals to produce rubies and examined with high temperatures, you began to wonder how the earth must have been millions of years before rubies were first crystallized, and what were the forces at play that made this planet what it is today. You begin to study the investigation made by other scientists and you cause you to formulate theories to explain the earth, and, for that matter, the whole solar system was created. That would be a process of research of a different kind—pioneering into the unknown.

The same process of research is used in the laboratory of the General Electric Company. It is the study of research of a different kind from that required to improve the stone.

In view of this, the following resolution was drawn up by the Editor, and the following notice issued:

"The new house, you must begin with the foundation."

"The spectators at an exhibition like this are constant witnesses to the progress of the means for preserving the world."
