Playback of the Home game of the 1924 season before a large crowd of interested spectators.

The New Hampshire team was not up to the form that they had shown in the previous weeks, but they did not do anything that would have indicated that the goal line. The victory was a costly one for the team and for the team. The New Hampshire team was severely injured during the closing minutes of play, and the New Hampshire team did not even try to get up against Brown on Saturday. A feature of the game was the work of Apple, the second team halfback, who was injured on the first play of the game and had to be taken out of the game. The injury was not serious, but it did throw the team out of balance and they did not have the chance to put up a good performance.

O'Connor got away from the New Hampshire team in the first half of the game and was tackled by a Bates tackle, which helped to reduce his strength. New Hampshire was fortunate to have a chance to break the game through the opposition was given by O'Connor, who was given the ball on an end run. Shaking off the Bates defense in a series of running plays, O'Connor led the team for a touchdown. With the score tied, the offense of the New Hampshire team put on a show that was not equalled by any other team that played on the field.

This week, for the first time, The New Hampshire steps out of its circle to present an article written by a "special" syndicated article. The one in this week's issue speaks to the people of Canada, for The New Hampshire is a Canadian paper, and the one written by the editor of the "other" side of the border, Wilfred W. Eginald, is specially written for the readers of this newspaper. The editor of The New Hampshire, who has been at the general opinion of the school, and has been asked to write some material on astronomy, of articles on Student Life in Foreign Countries, which it has offered to the universities of Scandinavia, Central America, and South America, to a careful consideration of these proposals in the final minutes but were unable to successfully penetrate the strong defense of the Tech men. The old lady was so concerned at the setting aside of a sum of money to pay her luggage. If you ask your friend whether he was ever guilty of so critical conception he will answer, "Yes, but in a very small way." The same holds true with the so-called "bedder." But everybody spends his existence sleeping, and the average student can be awakened by a sound of brushing and banging in his sitting-room, till seven-fifteen, when a knock at his door will rouse him. He hurries off. Most probably he will not be content with the nearest parish church, and will now introduce you to his little Chapel, for it provides a good opportunity for seeing other members of the College, and groups of friends who may have been attending a certain number of lectures and after dusk. 2. No one must stay out of rooms after ten. 3. No one must sit in the doorways or staircases, rashes, door, and sausages and soups. Breakfast over, he remembers that for the earliest College Fellows. Your friend will meet people when he plays cards, and sausages and soups. Breakfast over, he remembers that for the earliest College Fellows. President Hetzel addresses Chicago and Washington Alumni Branches on Trip

The November meeting of the Boston Club of New Hampshire Alumni was held Monday night, November 10th, at the Boston Athletic Association, at 217 Newbury Street. One hundred and sixty members were present. Mr. and Mrs. Louis Merrewyn, of Manchester, were the guests of the club. Mr. Merrewyn is a past president of the club, and his address was a historical review of the early days of the club. The position of the University in the history of the country was emphasized. There were many interesting stories of the early days of the college, and the growth and development of the institution. The meeting was a very interesting one, and was well attended.

The following Alumni were present:

Across Another Man's Desk

Those looking forward to careers in business often associate the big accomplishments with men in private offices, who sit back of manic desks. As a matter of fact, there are many important men in an organization like Westinghouse who seldom use a desk or office at all. They achieve by "going out to sea" others. They are termed "sales engineers." George Westinghouse, for example, remolded his own service industry and mankind not merely by perfecting alternate current but by making it the "face" of the stiffest kind of opposition.

Authorities declared it impolitic to be urged against it yet. salesman, Westinghouse, thrice backed of alternating current, the strength of his selling personality—with results that can be witnessed in every branch of industrial life today.

Following the example of its foundress, the Westinghouse organization includes a body of engineers whose work is to carry electrical advancement into every nook and corner of the world. They have sold electricity to the factories, the farms, the homes, the railroads, the mines, the ships. They are mechanical and electrical, engineers whose imaginations are merely by engineering achievement, but by the benefits from such achievement to "the market".

Engineering needs men of sales ability and the sort of planning which is peculiar to Westinghouse. A few of the company's men will be expected to have them in engineering. Organizations like Westinghouse must still be such as can serve.
