The University of New Hampshire hockey team lost last evening on the home ice in Durham, when they played the University of New Hampshire, Maine, who took the lead early in the game and held it for nine of the fifteen minutes, and coasted to victory in the remaining six. The Maine team scored six goals to the UNH one. The game was played before a largely student audience, and the two teams played to an evenly split crowd. The final score was six to one in favor of Maine. The game was played under the direction of Coach E. W. Christenberry, who has been the coach of the Maine team for the past five years.

The first period was marked by the Maine team’s superior play, as they scored all of their goals in the opening five minutes. The game was not a particularly exciting one, as the Maine team played a fairly conservative style of hockey, and the UNH team was unable to get many scoring chances.
