Drew Conroy, professor of applied animal science at the Thompson School, is in Rwanda with his family during the spring semester through his second Fulbright Scholar Award, while his son, Ross Conroy '17, is studying there through a Boren scholarship. Conroy is teaching at Nyagatare, Rwanda, which “is also where most of the pastoralists are and also the largest wildlife park,” he explains. For two decades, Conroy has “consulted, assisted with workshops related to oxen and draft animal power, done research with pastoralists and farmers using oxen and taught in Africa during summers and sabbaticals.”
