DURHAM, N.H. – In tough economic times when job candidates must stand out above the rest, the University of New Hampshire Whittemore School of Business and Economics announces the return of summer session classes focusing on job seekers marketing themselves toward potential employers.

“Selling Yourself in a Tough Economy” provides insight on how the recent changes in the economy have altered the way businesses are hiring and shows course participants how to set themselves apart in the job market.

“Social Media” and “Web-Based Marketing” feature the use of social networking mediums, such as Facebook and Twitter, as essential marketing tools and platforms to reach both potential and existing customers.

In addition to the marketing classes for job seekers, the Whittemore School is offering an extensive selection of business courses for graduate and undergraduates this summer, including “Principles of Macroeconomics,” “Principles of Microeconomics,” “Introduction to Organizational Behavior,” “Business, Government and Society,” “Survey of Marketing,” “Promotion and Advertising,” “International Marketing,” “Financial Accounting,” “Managerial Accounting,” “Introduction to Financial Management,” “Quantitative Decision Making,” and “Strategic Management: Decision Making.”
