Since 1999 the IOD has presented the Autism Summer Institute, a conference for families, educators, community service providers, and self-advocates. The 2011 theme recognizes that many students and adults with autism have not been provided with high-quality literacy instruction or with a means to communicate if their spoken voice is not effective. This theme will be addressed through four age-based strands, including a first-ever strand specifically for adolescents and young adults with autism.

Conference participants will hear from several student and young adult self-advocates as keynote presenters, including Drew Goldsmith, Nick Holzthum, and Taylor Brown, student advocates from the I am Norm campaign; Scott Michael Robertson from the Autistic Self-Advocacy Network; and DJ Savarese, student and self-advocate. Other featured presenters include Christi Kasa, Ph.D., University of Colorado; Paula Kluth, Ph.D., consultant, author, and advocate; Donna Williams, author, artist, and self-advocate; and Therese Willkomm, Ph.D., ATP, University of New Hampshire.

The conference will also feature a hands-on technology exploration and communication consultation lab where attendees can test out accessible computers (hardware and software), augmentative communication devices, and other assistive technology solutions. This exhibit is made possible by a partnership with ATECH Services in collaboration with Assistive Technology in New Hampshire, Therese Willkomm, Linda Rammler, Ph.D., and Dan Herlihy.

The Autism Summer Institute is designed for and will benefit individuals with ASD, educators, parents, paraprofessionals, school administrators, guidance counselors, related services providers, psychologists, university students, educational teams including families, and others interested in creating more inclusive opportunities for students with ASD.

The Institute on Disability at the University of New Hampshire was established in 1987 to provide a coherent university-based focus for the improvement of knowledge, policies, and practices related to the lives of persons with disabilities and their families. Its mission is to strengthen communities to ensure full access, equal opportunities, and participation for all persons.

The University of New Hampshire, founded in 1866, is a world-class public research university with the feel of a New England liberal arts college. A land, sea, and space-grant university, UNH is the state's flagship public institution, enrolling 12,200 undergraduate and 2,300 graduate students.
