DURHAM, N.H. – Chris Rondeau, CEO of Planet Fitness, will discuss how the company changed the health club industry at the next University of New Hampshire CEO Forum Thursday, Sept. 29, 2011.

The program begins at 8 a.m. in Huddleston Hall.

Rondeau was an undergraduate at UNH when he took a job working the front desk at Planet Fitness that had been launched in Dover by brothers Michael and Marc Grondahl. From that part-time position, Rondeau rose to operations chief and equity partner. Along the way, he helped formulate and refine a business model that has revolutionized the health club industry.

With its low prices and “Judgement Free Zone” atmosphere, Planet Fitness has tapped into a new market of gym-goers – the 85 percent of the population who did not feel comfortable in health clubs or had never seen one with a compelling value proposition.

Today with more than 440 locations in 41 states and nearly 3 million members, Planet Fitness is one of the largest health club operators in the country. Planet Fitness has made Inc. magazine’s list the fastest-growing private businesses in America for the last four years.
