UNH President Keynote Speaker At April 11 Conference On Disruptive Innovation

April 6, 2012

DURHAM, N.H. – University of New Hampshire President Mark Huddleston will be the keynote speaker at Disruptivate! 2012, a day-long conference Wednesday, April 11, 2012, in New Castle organized by the NH Innovation Commercialization Center. The event also features six N.H. entrepreneurs who practice and exemplify “disruptive innovation,” including UNH alums Doug Clark ’79 of NEF Manufacturing and Ryan Zarick ’10 of BuzzDraft.com.

Huddleston will present on his efforts to implement disruptive innovation at UNH beginning at 10:20 a.m. A strong advocate for increasing affordability and accessibility in higher education, Huddleston’s 10-year strategic plan for the university emphasizes innovation and entrepreneurship, and he is an advocate of the concept of "Disruptive Innovation" as an important one for all public institutions, especially UNH. In addition, Scott Valcourt, director of strategic technology at UNH, will talk about the Network NH Now Project and how it is bringing next generation broadband opportunities across the state.

Tickets for the day-long conference are $119, and are available online at http://www.disruptivate.biz. The six “disruptivators” are each applying innovative technologies to disrupt big markets like aerospace materials, footwear manufacturing, business intelligence, medical records, fantasy sports, and health insurance.
