5-21-2012

UNH Professor Discusses History of Financial Crises on C-SPAN3's 'American History TV'

Lori Wright
UNH Media Relations

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholars.unh.edu/news

Recommended Citation
https://scholars.unh.edu/news/3950

This News Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Administrative Offices at University of New Hampshire Scholars' Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in Media Relations by an authorized administrator of University of New Hampshire Scholars' Repository. For more information, please contact nicole.hentz@unh.edu.
UNH Professor Discusses History of Financial Crises on C-SPAN3's 'American History TV'
DURHAM, N.H. – The credit market had ground to a halt. Banks suspended their operations. Economic giants around the world tottered on the edge of financial collapse. Global banks appealed to governments for support.

Sound like 2008 and the years following? That actually is a description of the Panic of 1837, which led to a global depression that ushered in a decade of poverty, dispossession, and exploitation that inspired Karl Marx, among others, to advocate social revolution.

Jessica Lepler, assistant professor of history at the University of New Hampshire, recently discussed the similarities and differences between the most recent global financial crisis and the Panic of 1837 on C-SPAN3’s “American History TV.” Lepler was interviewed at a meeting with the Organization of American Historians.

“During times of ‘gloom and doom,’ no one accepts blame for financial sins. Rather, it is in troubled times when financiers admit, as one New York Times reporter noted, ‘the inability of these sophisticated institutions to assign accurate values to their holdings.’ If complete economic knowledge is ever possible, it is only available retrospectively. If we really want to end our market woes, we need to teach Americans economics and teach economists history,” Lepler says.

The program, ”Economic Crises in U.S. History,” is available online at http://www.c-spanvideo.org/program/305656-1.

“History provides us with a way of understanding the world, a way of paying attention to the sources of the past and trying to figure out how people in the past framed their own lives. I think that’s really important to think through for ourselves and to see that we actually have power over the way we think through our lives, not just how we live our lives,” she says.

The University of New Hampshire, founded in 1866, is a world-class public research university with the feel of a New England liberal arts college. A land, sea, and space-grant university, UNH is the state's flagship public institution, enrolling 12,200 undergraduate and 2,300 graduate students.

-30-

Media Contact: Lori Wright | 603-862-0574 | UNH Media Relations

UNH Experts available for comment:

- Jessica Lepler