21st century grand challenges. Her work on global citizenship and leadership is particularly timely.”

A leading scholar of rhetoric, literacy and women’s studies, Royster has published six books and two textbook series, including her 2000 book, “Traces of a Stream: Literacy and Social Change among African American Women,” which won the Mina P. Shaughnessy Prize from the Modern Language Association. Her research focuses at the intersections of the history of rhetoric, feminist studies and cultural studies with a primary interest in the connections between human and civil rights.

The John T. Holden Memorial Fund in the College of Liberal Arts is dedicated to bringing signal scholars in the social sciences to UNH.
