DURHAM, N.H. - The University of New Hampshire will host the state's 11th annual China Town Hall, an international event that will focus on Sino-American relations and feature Ambassador Susan Rice, Tuesday, Oct. 24, 2017, at 7 p.m. in Murkland Hall's Richards Auditorium. The event is free and open to the public.

The event features a live webcast by Rice, who was President Obama's ambassador to the United Nations (2009-2013) and his national security advisor (2013-2017). Rice also served as U.S. assistant secretary of state for African Affairs and senior director for African Affairs at the National Security Council. Her decades of public service and critical role in developing and executing the Obama administration's policies towards China make her perspective on the relationship especially relevant during this uncertain time in the bilateral relationship.

"During her tenure as President Obama's national security advisor, Ambassador Rice sought a more pragmatic relationship with China that focused on cooperation on climate change, peacekeeping and non-proliferation," said Chris Reardon, associate professor of political science and co-founder of UNH's Asian studies program, who will moderate the event.

After the live webcast, Lyle Goldstein, associate professor in the China Maritime Studies Institute (CMSI) at U.S. Naval War College, will speak about China and North Korea and reflect on Rice's comments. He has published several books on China's maritime policies as well articles in China Quarterly, International Security, IJSS Survival, Marine Policy, Contemporary Southeast Asia, Journal of Strategic Studies, and U.S. Naval Institute Proceedings. In a recent NPR interview, Goldstein argued that the U.S. should consider China's suggestion to halt military exercises with South Korea, in exchange for North Korea freezing its nuclear and missile tests.

The China Town Hall is sponsored by the National Committee on U.S.-China Relations, the UNH Department of Political Science and the UNH Asian Studies program.
