UNH leaders left the post-commencement quiet of campus and spent a full day in New Hampshire's largest city May 24, visiting Manchester to hear the ways in which university partnerships are making an impact in several critical areas and to explore opportunities to further strengthen those connections to address diverse and ongoing challenges.

UNH President Jim Dean was joined by Provost Wayne Jones, Senior Vice Provost for Research, Economic Engagement and Outreach Marian McCord, Vice Provost of Outreach and Engagement and UNH Extension Director Ken La Valley and Dean of UNH Manchester Mike Decelle. The Spring tour made four stops in the Queen City, building on an inaugural excursion

“As the public flagship university in New Hampshire, we embrace the fact that our role is to be helpful to the state in as many ways as possible. We want to be engaged with our communities, to learn what their challenges are and to find the ways we can help address them,” Dean says. “Visits like this are imperative to helping us achieve that.”
